the interest expense that you have for that item as well. That also reduces your child support. But, remember, your child support's only calculated once. It's in the year you have the divorce. So if you can go in that year that you're having the divorce, get a lot of depreciation, your child support's going to go down to minimum. You could really manipulate that. And so then, for the next so many years as your child support's been set, it's been based on that year you had depreciation. And I know it's attractive and I know that there are a number of people who would like to be able to address the farm economy and say, look, you shouldn't pay child support based on that, but there really is some other "unfairnesses" that come into here. What happens if you have a subchapter S corporation and that income flows through and that depreciation flows through the individual? They're going to have to add that back in because they're not self-employed, where somebody who is self-employed is going to get to take it off. So you've got two people in roughly the same situation. Because one's a...

SENATOR SCHIMEK: One minute.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: ...a subchapter S corporation and the other is self-employed that you're going to treat them differently, and that's where this whole thing becomes very complicated to do. The other end is that this is going to have one direct result, that you're going to reduce the amount of child support paid. And I got to tell you that I know people who are paying child support. That's great. But for those that need child support and rely on the child support, this has a real, real big impact on them and in those farm economies there's not enough money to go around right now, but what you're going to do is you're going to have less child support paid. Less child support, where are they going to go? Well, they're going to come right back on for state assistance. Because, in many of these cases, if you're showing a loss of income because of depreciation, you're going to get a minimal child support order of...

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Time.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: ...50 to 100 bucks a month.
