imposition of a point against a person's license every time he or she is convicted of not having a seat belt. And it would also put in the requirement that a person convicted of one of these violations would have to pay court costs. Now, the reason this present weak version of the seat belt law was put into effect is because, as Senator Schmitt pointed out, the public had petitioned, successfully, to repeal the mandatory seat belt law. Then the Legislature, which supposedly represents the public, came back and went directly contrary to their expressed will and reenacted a seat belt law. And I fought against it. I fight against all these kind of bills, mandatory helmet and right on down the line. So they put this weakened version in where there'll be no points against a person's license, there will be no court costs that have to be paid, and it's a secondary violation. That's what this bill is related to. I'm opposed to those things. And I'm going to take, since this is my opening and I have a little more time, this opportunity to read about this exchange between me and Captain Friend of the Omaha Police Division, and this was from a January 21st, 1999, Judiciary Committee hearing on LB 73. "SENATOR CHAMBERS: I have to ask you a question now because, Officer Friend, you kind of opened the door. You mentioned the quality of work that can be done by Omaha police officers in investigating. How is it that the cell phone which was used by a man just before he was shot wound up in a police cruiser? How did that happen? DAVID FRIEND: Well, I think there's a human fallibility factor that every person, regardless of their job, assignment, choice of career path, is subject to. Obviously, there were some things, mistakes that were made, something that was overlooked. But I would also caution you that, just because the Omaha police made a mistake on this case, we're all subject to that human fallibility. So is anybody else. My point is, we have the most experience. Are we going to make mistakes? You bet, absolutely. SENATOR CHAMBERS: But, see, experience, that just means you repeat the same thing over and over. That doesn't necessarily mean that anything is learned from the repetition. Would that mean that Mr. Ammons, at some point, was inside the cruiser and he dropped his phone during that time? DAVID FRIEND: Are you asking me to deduce that that could be a possible explanation for the...? SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes. DAVID FRIEND: I suppose that's entirely possible, sure." To deviate now from reading this, never was he supposedly inside the
