cruiser. Supposedly, the cruiser stopped near his vehicle, he approached the cruiser and he wound up being shot. "SENATOR CHAMBERS: But you would discount the notion that the officers went outside the cruiser and picked up the phone and put it in the car themselves. DAVID FRIEND: Which officers, sir? SENATOR CHAMBERS: Who were at the Ammons' incident; the two officers who were involved directly in the shooting. DAVID FRIEND: Your question, just so that I can be clear on this, is would I discount that Officer Sears or Kister" (that's spelled K-i-s-t-e-r) "did that? SENATOR CHAMBERS: Let me ask it a different way. You would not accept that as something that is likely to have happened. DAVID FRIEND: I would not. SENATOR CHAMBERS: Nor am I suggesting that. But it's clear that he had the phone, because he had a conversation. The phone had to be in his possession. The officers had him in view all of the time from the time he came from his car to the time he arrived at theirs, based on their accounts. They watched him every step of the way. Neither one recounted seeing a phone in his hand, unless what was a phone was mistaken by somebody for a gun. But I'm not going to speculate about that. Let's deal with the facts. The facts are that his phone that he had in his possession wound up in the police cruiser. Nobody at the scene discovered it. Neither Officers Sears nor Kister could explain how it got there, because the grand jurors, in their reports and their statements, said that none of the testimony from any of the officers could explain how the phone got in this car." And that's all of it that I'll read at this point. This is how the police operate and they don't have to explain that. Here I am, a black man with a cell phone in my hand. I supposedly approach the cruiser. I get shot. My cell phone winds up in their car. It's not even found by these two officers, but the only way it would get in the car, if I were not in the car, is for it to have flown through the window. And certainly the cop sitting in the seat would have seen the phone, because it might have hit him or even landed on his lap. But neither officer knew anything about the phone, supposedly. And when it was discovered, it was found under the seat of the cruiser. When the man wound up dead with two bullet holes, a gun in a holster was found near his right hand. Now, did he have a cell phone in one hand and a gun in the other? Well, if he got shot, then the cell phone's not going to wind up in the cruiser. And if he got shot and, based on what some white witnesses said, his hands
