You can be shaving along the neck and cut through that artery. You may not properly sterilize your razor and you may nick somebody's ear and cause an infection. You may transmit a disease from one person to another. Yet, you don't find all of this with reference to that particular activity. I think it is overkill in this bill and my motion on the desk is to return the bill to strike the enacting clause which, in effect, would kill it. At this point, that is not really my purpose. I want the bill delayed. But Senator Suttle had graciously agreed to pull the bill from Final Reading one time already. I cannot ask her or any other person to do that more than one time, so if the only alternative available is to try to kill the bill, that's what I have to do. We may not have to get to that point, but I want to make it clear that I find substantial problems with this bill. There's a provision talking about...it's usually referred to as the grandfather clause, and, Senator Redfield, although most of the people involved are females, it's still called "grandfathering", which goes again to show the emphasis on males and making it possible for them not to have to meet certain qualifications. That's where the term grandfather clause came in. If it was women, they wouldn't even be allowed to forego certain qualifications, but if they were it would be called "grandmothering". But, at any rate, if...in order for you to be grandfathered into this bill, you will have to have been working in this area for at least 12 months before November of this year, of 1999. There are students in school right now who, under their agreement, would be required to take 120 hours to finish. This bill will take effect and those 120 hours are out the window. There are many women taking this schooling on a part-time basis. They had to find...make arrangements for child care, work it into their husband's work schedule, and some of them have contacted me to give me specific examples. Now, in the middle of that course, the 120 hours will not be sufficient. Even if the school says, okay, you finished 120 hours, you can't use it to start working because you will not have completed 12 months of functioning as a nail technologist before November of this year, and you're going to also have to take 480 more hours before you can even be in a position to take a test. They put in here that you have to have an equivalency, a high school equivalency if you come from another country, and it must be the equivalent of an American high school education. People have come to this country pursuant to the invitation of the Statute
