LR 14

you're going to have at the final, and that's what you're concerned about, let the whole universe of people in the state of Nebraska be open for selection by whoever the person is that was nominated for Governor, and I'm sure that person who is nominated would ask a potential running mate, are you willing, when the general election comes, to change your party affiliation?

SENATOR BROMM: But does...

SENATOR COORDSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And if the person said "no" then that person couldn't be selected.

SENATOR BROMM: But...but wouldn't you agree that that opens up the gubernatorial candidate to choose a person not necessarily because they're of their same philosophy but to choose a person of a different philosophy in order to...in order to garner enough votes to win the election? I mean doesn't it...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That...that...

SENATOR BROMM: ...doesn't it inject perhaps another element that isn't in the mix right now in that respect?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That's why...that's why candidates choose running mates. They choose somebody who can bring something to the table. They don't...the Governor candidate does not want that team to be like the pushmi-pullyu in Doctor Dolittle where one head...

SENATOR BROMM: Well...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...you got a head on each end of a beast. One's going one direction, one's going the other direction. Consequently, the beast doesn't move at all. The candidate for Governor is going to select somebody with the intention and the expectation that that person would bring votes...

SENATOR BROMM: Um-hum.
