to use that, and never have a problem with a car that gets polluted by that smoke falling into the hands of somebody who has one of these hypersensitive allergic reactions. There is at every step the initial desire to have no accommodation, and then we have to force accommodation into this, by the way, without a public hearing. This may be described as a good faith effort, but I would think talking to the opponents or the people who have been making criticisms and bringing them into the loop would be a fair discussion of working it out. That did not happen in this case. And the characterization of this was worked out with people who had concerns is not an accurate characterization. There hasn't been a public hearing, there hasn't been an approach of meeting everybody with concerns. And although the bill is going to go, the Preister amendment is going to be passed, I just want to throw the flag every now and then at people who commonly get up and talk about how government shouldn't be too intrusive and we need to make sure that there's freedoms for people, throwing them away on Select File without a public hearing, with no attempt of accommodating, and that, frankly, I think we can do a better job of accommodating the differences between people, and we ought to when we can. This exam...this amendment is an example of that. For that reason, I'm going to vote against the amendment, but it's going to pass, I understand that, and the bill is going to pass, that's okay. I'm a lonely voice of one here. On the other hand, I spent the other day talking about the freedom of choice, and this is another minor example of that in which we foreclose choice by making sure there's one and only one rule in the case of vehicles. Either way it doesn't make any difference that we give the Governor a vehicle for four years, and it's basically a private vehicle for him. I mean it replaces what would be your private car. I don't want to go down the road trying to identifying those cars which are like private cars. It will get us to the same place we are in the bill. The thing that I'm pointing out here is the absence of the desire to accommodate...

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...and that's unfortunate, that's unfortunate. It's also going to be the majority will, and we're going to live with that, and I certainly can as well. I wish, however, that
