SENATOR CHAMBERS: Madam President, members of the Legislature, Senator Schellpeper, with his folding knife, has taken another swipe at the pencil that is moving in the right direction, and then what my next amendment that we come to will attempt to do is to strike all of Section 6 from the committee amendment. And I will tell you, again, why I do not like the approach of this bill. The retailers I am going to analogize to bank robbers. Since they're drug dealers, that kind of elevates their stature. Bank robbers have been glamorized, Willie "the actor" Sutton, Jesse James, and some of these other persons, but I have not seen any drug dealer glamorized. Now the bank robbers have but one purpose when they go into a bank to engage in their activity, and that's to make unauthorized withdrawals. So the bank robber wants to sit down with the sheriff and the banker and discuss how the laws relative to protecting banks from bank robbers are to be written. Now the state and the commission are the sheriff. You all are the sheriff. The retailers are the bank robbers, and illegally selling liquor constitutes the crime of robbing the bank. So the bank robbers come in and they all sit around the table with the sheriff and with the bankers, and they say here's how we think you ought to guard against your banks being robbed. You ought to take the locks off the front door, you ought to demolish that big old safe you have in the back, and bring all the money and anything else of value that you have and put it right on the counter out here in the front. Then you ought to have all these security guards leave, just fire them and you can save money and that leaves you more money to put on top of the counter. After you've gotten rid of the security guards, the bankers ought to just stay home, and while they're at home, then the sheriff ought to take a vacation. Then I can walk into the bank and do what it is that I want to do and nobody gets hurt, nobody runs the risk of getting hurt, and everybody is happy. But if you're going to resist me, you might get hurt. The drug dealers, that you all call retailers are saying...oh, by the way, the ones who'd be hurt, if you don't have deposit insurance, federal deposit insurance, would be the depositors whose goods...whose wealth will be taken by the robbers. The ones hurt in the real situation are the young people who are illegally sold this liquor. So what we're being told is that a deputy sheriff, Senator Schellpeper, has sat down
