disciplined for what authorities said involved special treatment--driving the officer home instead of arresting him. Michael L. Vittitoe," V-i-t-t-i-t-o-e, 47, was charged Tuesday with driving under the influence, a charge punishable by a $500 fine, 7 to 60 days in jail, and a six-month license suspension. Vittitoe resigned February 3rd. The two officers have been identified in court documents as Kevin Parker and Samuel Murabito. Sergeant Dan Cisar, a police spokesman, declined to specify the disciplinary action taken against the two officers. 'As a police department, we must demand the highest professional and personal standards from our officers', Cisar said. 'Our officers are not above the law'. The incident started with a near-miss accident January 25th near 114th Street and West Center Road involving what witnesses described as an erratic driver. According to witness accounts and court documents, police were summoned and the driver was identified as a police officer. At least two witnesses later contacted the police administration to find out how the matter was handled. Cisar said Thursday that authorities did not learn of the incident until the inquiries from the witnesses". That's because they got lying cops who are not upholding their oath to enforce the law. "James Griffiths, manager of yard operations for Union Pacific, was one of the witnesses. Griffiths said Thursday that he and his girlfriend first encountered a driver, identified later as Vittitoe, near 105th Street and West Center Road. 'We drove around him', he said. 'It didn't look to be safe to be driving behind him.' Near the intersection of 114th and West Center, Griffiths said, the man ran over a median and nearly hit Griffiths vehicle. The driver then stopped his vehicle and got out. 'He stepped down an embankment,' Griffiths said, 'and he tumbled and fell.'"

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: "Griffiths said he and another motorist stopped to check on the driver and kept him from leaving. 'He was just very drunk,' Griffiths said. Griffiths then approached a private security officer who was making checks at a nearby apartment complex and asked him for help. The court documents filed in Douglas County Court allege that Vittitoe had to be restrained because he became combative with the security officer. 'He certainly was opposed to producing his
