violations, in terms of the seriousness of the violation; and then there are other procedural powers given to the Attorney General which I think are important. For example, 87-303.03 says that the Attorney General has the power to issue subpoenas to require the attendance of witnesses, of the production of documents, et cetera, et cetera. And then there are particular penalties apply...that apply once an agreement has been reached on a matter with a party who's violated the section, and if they then, in turn, violate the agreement, there are stiffer penalties provided in the Deceptive Trade Practices Act. Those would not apply to this act as passed unless we include this amendment and contain the reference. So, generally speaking, the whole thrust of the act is to put the enforcement powers of the Deceptive Trade Practices Act behind this particular act. What I would like to do this morning though, because I had no opportunity to alert Senator Bromm or Senator Crosby to this amendment, is to simply leave it up there for a period of time for people to ask questions or to make comments, and then eventually I will withdraw it with the hope that the two of them would perhaps take a look at it before Select File and, if they found some value in it, all or part of it, to stiffen this up in terms of the enforcement sections. Because, honestly, I think it will be difficult for an individual to enforce this act, as it is difficult for an individual to enforce themselves the Deceptive Trade Practices Act or trade practices of one type or another. It really gets enforced when the Attorney General comes in and makes a scene and demands that companies or corporations do things differently, and this particular provision would...the concept is to allow the Attorney General to get more involved and to add some weight and some heft to the enforcement provisions of this particular bill. Thank you.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Senator Beutler. To speak to the Beutler amendment, Senator Wehrbein, please.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Yes, Mr. President, members of the body, I doesn't...I wasn't...didn't know what Senator Beutler's amendment was, but as I listened to him talk, I'd like to ask Senator Bromm a question, perhaps because he's a former county attorney.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Senator Bromm, would you respond, please?
