Transcriber's Office

March 22, 1999 LB 149

estate was all local. The state did not levy any of those taxes, and that's what they touted when they tried to get business and other...and people to move to Nebraska. Back in the fifties, when my husband was Governor, you'll remember that he tried very hard and I think almost got rid of the personal property tax. Remember, Operation Honesty, you were supposed to declare on your personal property form that the assessor brought around to your house what you had that was taxable. You don't have a piano, do you, the assessor would say, and he's sitting right next to the piano. Nobody wore any diamonds, no furs, nothing. And the other thing was it had to do with stocks and bonds that you owned, and a lot of people did not declare them and that was the whole thing that had...that was the whole thrust of Operation Honesty, to get people to be honest if they wanted to continue that tax. Well, we got rid of that. In 1966, the state, was on the ballot to put in a sales and income tax. I guess maybe that's where the fun began because, after it was voted in, and you were talking about that this morning, the people voted for it and then they didn't want it. They blamed Nobby Tiemann for the sales and income tax. He didn't put it on the ballot, but he was a victim of that particular legislation. One of the things that I think, and Senator Chambers said something a minute ago that made me think of this, one of the mistakes I think along the way that the Legislature did, and I don't remember the year and I didn't look, they took away from the Equalization Committee the tax-setting privilege. Before that, Legislature did not set the tax rates. So this has all been coming along and we're still on the track, we still haven't gotten it right, and that's why I react the way I do to LB 149, 'cause we still haven't gotten it right. Every year there's some problem. We need $22 million, I guess it's down to a little less than 20 million now, to make up to the state aid to the school districts so they are alive and well, so they are whole. And it's been explained to me many different ways and each one of them confuses me. I still have all these little maps and graphs that Senator Wickersham wrote out for me one day in my office. But...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SENATOR CROSBY: ...still, each person has a different reason for voting for or against LB 149. I'm trying to be consistent.
