SENATOR JANSSEN: Okay.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Is there anything in this bill which provides a test or any means by which to determine if a person should be disqualified from having a license based on whatever physical condition this person may have?

SENATOR JANSSEN: Yes, on page 6, line 20, that he or she does not suffer from a physical infirmity which prevents the safe handling of a handgun.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Now where is that infirmity defined, if it is? What I wanted was a listing of those types of afflictions that would let a person know in advance what's going to disqualify him. Because suppose we have a white guy going to get a license and a black guy going to get a license and the black guy's a little shaky and the white guy is somewhat shaky too, but they let the white guy get the gun and the black guy doesn't, and the black guy says, you want to arm white people but you don't want me to get an arm.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Oh...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And then they say, well, you have this physical infirmity. Where is the standard in this law that would prevent that kind of discrimination?

SENATOR JANSSEN: That would be up to the department, which would be the State Patrol, that is issuing that permit. It would be upon their judgment whether he was physically able of handling that particular gun.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So discrimination is possible under the language of this bill, as it exists right now.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Well, you and I know, Senator Chambers, that discrimination is not only in black and white, it is in male and female, it is in short and tall, it is in slim and heavy.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But...

SENATOR JANSSEN: That, if you're going to start picking on
