LB 476

there, it's because they all got killed by those carrying these guns. But there have been articles written about the number of arrests, the number of crimes being committed by these people in Texas who have licenses to carry these guns. Senator Tyson is something like that guy, Lott, who wrote this book. He just says things, and nobody is supposed to question it. Lott wrote them, feeling that the kind of people he's trying to reach will say, well it's got to be true because it's in a book. I'm sorry that the baron succumbed to that. "Baron" Tyson, that scalawag, Lott, had appeared before the Judiciary Committee, and I grilled him like a hamburger. He underestimated me. He looked at me, I'm sure, and wondered what I was even doing sitting at the table with the senators. There I am with a beard, long hair, a sweatshirt, just kind of reared back in my chair, trying to figure out what's it all about, Alfie. So in his arrogant way that he probably has in dealing with legislators who are intimidated and put in awe by badges and titles, and started talking all this nonsense, then after the first few questions I asked he became wary. Then he became little uncertain. So I guess he decided he'd stay away from Nebraska when the actual hearing occurred on this bill. See, I was laying for him, Senator Tyson. I had some of those mixed herbs, that you have in these little containers, and I was going to set that right on my desk, right on my table, and I call it a flipper, other people call it a spatula, a flipper that I was going to set to the left side, and a skillet that I was going to sit right between them. And I wouldn't say a word about what they were there for, and I would just give him a knowing look. Lott is the last person in the world whose word can be relied on in this matter. It is positively stupid when you look at the number of deaths caused by handguns, intentional, accidental, and self-inflicted wounds, to say that the more people who carry guns the less crime you'll have. Preposterous. Senator Tyson, you and I were discussing a way to do away with some of the problems in society, not that we would use this methodology. But we had discussed when various plagues have come upon the earth and decimated the population. And by reducing the number of people, certain problems that came into existence, due to the size of the population, were diminished apace. That was not the way we would go about doing it. But if you look realistically at the results of those things, the plagues, you could see where...
