and, as I mentioned to Senator Janssen, I don't know what that period is, Senator Chambers, but I do know, I've been to a couple of those auctions and what is auctioned off is really, I would think, almost junk cars.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So, Senator Tyson, you're telling us, and I don't know this to be a fact, you're telling us that the law establishes a period after which a vehicle in one of these lots is deemed abandoned?

SENATOR TYSON: I believe that that is so.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But you're not sure that it's in the law? And I'm not being argumentative.

SENATOR TYSON: No, I understand that. No, I'm...I do not know what that period is. Now, I will tell you that, following Senator Janssen's question, I have asked that the city attorney be called in Norfolk and I will get the law for you, but it may take a little while to do so, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That's okay, because here's...here's another aspect of it I want to ask you, just for your opinion. If we're talking about a lien, and the green copy on page 17 talks about that, the lien in no case could be more than the value of the car. Would you agree?

SENATOR TYSON: I would agree with that, yes,...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So the person at this lot...

SENATOR TYSON: ...to the extent, Senator Chambers, that it seems logical.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. The person at this lot would not have a right to move against anything other than that vehicle.

SENATOR TYSON: Yes, I believe that to be true.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, thank you, Senator Tyson. That's my view too, but I would like to put some assurances into the law, and here's what I see happening. Maybe it would never happen in
