hate, we loath, that's the time for us to test our sincerity about enacting laws that are fair. If we're passing a law for a woman, I'm a man, I'm passing a law for the woman that I love, then you know what kind of law that's going to be. There ain't going to be no law. She can do whatever she wants to do. It's right because she does it. But let it be that woman that I would call a vixen, a Jezebel, a tramp if she's poor, a trollop if she's rich, because she told me no, then I'll be passing a law for her and you'd see something else. It'd be thicker than the Bible and more complex than the IRS Code. I'd cover every possible thing, not only that she could do but she could think of, and make it wrong. So what we need to do when we're passing laws is to consider how we would want that law to affect those who mean something to us, and we don't want to go overboard and say, therefore, we will pass a law that excuses everything. No, when conduct for a rational reason is made illegal by society, it means nothing to do that if a sanction or punishment is not attached, but in attaching that punishment we should be very careful and wise. The constitution does not prohibit the criminalizing of any conduct. What it talks about is the punishment. Cruel, unusual punishments cannot be imposed.

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, I have another minute. So what I'm going to stress in dealing with this bill is not that something is wrong for trying to deal with these repeat violators when it comes to drinking and driving, but that we must enact laws that are suitable to the purpose, that are well-crafted, that embrace only what we're trying to deal with, and this language is far too broad. But I will have an opportunity to go through it and I'm sure some of the people who have read this language have said, huh-uh, he's just blowing smoke, that's tight language, he can't do nothing with it. Well, we'll just find out, brothers and sisters.

SENATOR CROSBY: Thank you, Senator Chambers. There are no further lights. Senator Bromm, you may close on your amendment.

SENATOR BROMM: Thank you, Senator Crosby. Once again, if you adopt this amendment, you are removing, what is to some, somewhat offense language and that deals with the removal or
