chocolate, and inside might be a cherry, and surrounding the cherry is a liquor, that would be illegal, wouldn't it?

SENATOR BROMM: Like a bourbon bonbon.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Right. That would be illegal, wouldn't it?

SENATOR BROMM: It could be.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No, it would be, under the language of the law,...

SENATOR BROMM: Well,...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...it would be illegal, wouldn't it?

SENATOR BROMM: It would...it would be, yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And the box in which...

SENATOR BROMM: But that's existing law, because consumption is existing law.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: We're continuing with what we're doing here.

SENATOR BROMM: Okay.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: The candy box is a receptacle under that interpretation, isn't that right?

SENATOR BROMM: I would say so.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Is a candy box deemed to be an open receptacle now, under existing law?

SENATOR BROMM: No.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: The cake box, or cake tin, or whatever receptacle the cake would be contained in would be an open receptacle, under this that we're dealing with,...
