get into a car and you drive across the border. Isn't that right? Let's see, 13-year-olds who are starting to smoke are going to also get into a car and drive to Kansas and buy their cigarettes? Uh-uh, thank you for playing but it doesn't work that way. Thirteen and fourteen-year-olds get their cigarettes in this state and that's how they get hooked, and the tobacco companies will hook them practically any way they can, including encouraging the theft of cigarettes, encouraging the theft of cigarettes. Now, how would that be possible? How could the tobacco companies encourage theft of teenagers? Tom. Oh, Tom's got a smile here. Maybe he knows. Because what happens is tobacco companies will pay you to place tobacco items in certain parts of your stores. And you know where they want them? They want them away from the cashier and they want them close to the door, and they want them in individualized packages. As a matter of fact, in the CBS study last night one of the stores said, lock, I got one of these arrangements with the tobacco company. I lose $1,000 in cigarettes in a month's time and I get about five or six or seven times that amount of money from the tobacco companies because they're paying me to place my cigarettes in those places, which happen to be really easy for theft. Now why would that be? Well, gosh, you want to get cigarettes, which are highly addictive, in the hands of 13 and 14 and 15-year-olds. Border bleeding occurs with adults. It doesn't occur with kids, because kids stay in this state. They don't drive across the border at 13, 14 and 15 to get the cigarettes. They buy them here. Now, they buy them sometimes from retailers, sometimes they buy them from other sources, and sometimes they steal them. But they don't cross the border and that's not how this business starts. As a matter of fact, 90 percent of smokers started when they were under 18. That's where the tobacco companies get themselves a new market. They hook kids who are 13, 14, 15, and 16. By the time that you are 18 years old or 19 years old, 90 percent of all the people who will ever smoke have begun smoking, and they started smoking when it was illegal to smoke and when it was illegal for retailers to sell to them. Ninety percent of all the adult smokers started during this period of time. So, if you want to control border bleeding, it's very much an adult problem, it's true, but the border bleeding does not affect youth. And Senator Tyson, who's left the floor and who raised the argument about personal freedom, I think makes a good argument for adults
