April 13, 1999 LB 505

Senator Baker is old enough to remember, we created a mortgage interest deduction for the very purpose of creating home ownership. And guess what happened to home ownership in exactly that period? It went through the roof. Changing the tax code does modify behavior, and you can't say with a straight face that it doesn't, it does it all the time. Capital gains tax. What did the Republican's say? Lower the capital gains tax, and you'll increase the amount of money on Wall Street. We've lowered the capital gains tax, and what's happened to Wall Street? Truth of the matter is the tax code very much affects behavior, and it's exactly the opposite that he claims, and in fact that's not what revenue tells us or revenue policy. We use the tax code to change behavior, and we do it for socially beneficial purposes, by giving tax exemptions. By the way, Senator Brashear is back here telling us that LB 775 has worked gang-busters. Why? Because it's a tax code change. That...nice try, but no, no, Tom, nah. It's illegal to sell now, so that should be enough. Right? It's illegal, or in the alternative, I guess it is, well it's illegal to sell now, and they're still getting them. Doesn't make any difference which way that argument works. Even though it's illegal to sell to youth, youth are smoking. If we thought a law against this to youth was going to work, it doesn't work. Making it enforceable isn't going to work either. That only means that you get to the person who you catch. Changing the price catches every transaction. Now that's its virtue and its vice. I agree it's a vice. And the vice is that it affects all of them, adult individuals who do have personal freedom to make this choice, and it will affect the price of their cigarettes as well. However, that is the downside of this. We have to make a value choice, and I'm prepared to make that value choice, others aren't. Trusting in making it illegal, however, as Senator Baker does point out, doesn't work. We haven't made it effective by simply making it illegal for the retailer. And I would suggest to you that we won't have much affect by making illegal for the minor. We already have enough criminalization of the behavior of minors. Why? Because, for one thing, they're 13, and 14, and 15, they don't have good sense. How do you get to 13, and 14-year-olds? Well, there are some...
