corner said, this barbershop has the best barbers in the neighborhood. The one next to him said, this shop has the best barbers in the city. The one next to him said, this has the best barbers in the world. And the last shop said, this has the best barbers on the block. That covered everything. Sometimes whimsy will help illustrate a point.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I understand everything now that Senator Wehrbein has said and I find out now I understood it anyway, but there simply is not that missing piece to the puzzle. The gap is there. Now sometimes, if you're dealing with an electrical device, you can make that current jump a gap. If you're in the circus and you have people on a trapeze you can have one of the artists release the swing, fly through the air, and be caught by the other. That's how those gaps are bridged. I don't see anything bridging the gap here.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Wehrbein.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Mr. President and members, I'm going to be brief. I support Senator Wickersham's amendment. I don't know how much more to get into it. But maybe this is misnamed. The risk is actually on the retiring farmer about as much as anything here because, instead of selling out for somewhat of a...perhaps not guaranteed but at least a reasonable price and simply retire, he's going to have some risk and some worry and so forth for the three years while he hopefully gets his return back on his money, in this case the form of a lease. I was going to ask Senator Chambers a question and then I'll...I'm going to quit at that, but say you had a...let's say...I was going to use a farm but...and I don't know any more about barbering than you maybe know about farming, but say you had a four-chair barbershop and some...and somebody came in that's doing a large...I don't know whether there's strings of barbershops or not. Maybe there is; maybe there isn't. But if you had a chance to sell out those four barbershops to one larger corporation that was making a chain of barbershops across the state versus helping a young person come in and start in your four-chair barbershop and giving him a break, which would
