strength of that grip, because when you have the dream, you can make things happen the way you want to, to some extent. He held onto this critter until this critter blessed his soul, whatever that meant. Well, this is my Jacob's ladder and I got hold of a critter--the budget bill. It is not just half human and half something else. It has many parts that are thrown together and some are discordant and I'm going to try to ferret those out,...

SENATOR COORDSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...and hold this critter until it blesses my soul and the soul of those in whom I take an interest. Now this critter itself cannot do it. But the father of the critter, Senator Wehrbein, does have that power and I'm going to hold on until Senator Wehrbein consents to bless my soul.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Wehrbein.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Mr. Speaker, members, I'm not good at talking, what was that, laying my head on a stone, is that what you do, Senator Chambers? We need about ten minutes yet of talking here, so we know, so an amendment can come down. There's been a general discussion here of putting some new money into Geneva and a study of the master plan and some additional money for Kearney as far as $2.5 million each year goes. So it would be $5 million new money. I think we can find some of that in the budget as we go down the road. Some of that will be coming from possibly another source, so we won't increase spending quite that much. Leaves the work camp in place on its present...present highway, present road, present path, whatever term I should be using, but recognizing the need to do something at Geneva. I will say, based on the conversation this afternoon, this issue had not been before the...our committee. I don't know if it had been in front of Judiciary or not, but we have not had this particular issue, the construction part, the renovation part at Geneva. We had toured, the committee had toured both of those campuses a year ago and recognized the need at Geneva, but there had not been a bill introduced for that. So this does get at the Dunbar building, I think that's $2.2 million. Does leave some money for the renovation at...some at Kearney, and does do the master plan, which I hope
