

TRANSCRIPT PREPARED BY THE CLERK OF THE LEGISLATURE
Transcriber's Office

April 28, 1999 LB 882

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, and you accept that the person being blamed, the person being made the scapegoat, the person being made the fall woman was the wife.

SENATOR VRTISKA: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. Thank you, Senator Vrtiska. Members of the Legislature, I've seen situations where a secretary would be blamed for a huge blunder of a CEO, yet the secretary does not even make decisions in that area where the blunder occurred, but the secretary's expendable. My secretary messed up. My stenographer messed up. But then let the secretary or the stenographer point out something that's going to redound to the benefit of the company and really look like a great thing. Then this stuffed shirt puffs out his chest, pulls in that big gut and says, I did it; this is why I get paid $170 million a year and my secretary gets $3.30 an hour. Take the credit but not the blame. The woman is always expendable. I'd like to ask Senator Vrtiska another question or two, if I may.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Senator Vrtiska?

SENATOR VRTISKA: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Was there anything, Senator Vrtiska, that came to your attention that suggested this scapegoat had training in preparing tax returns or tax forms?

SENATOR VRTISKA: No.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you think that this person was told to do this by the man who runs the company?

SENATOR VRTISKA: I have no idea.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That's why I'm asking "do you think". Do you opine? Drawing on your vast experience as a man of the world, in these situations...

SENATOR VRTISKA: Senator, I don't know what their relationship was in this. I assume that she did the books for the company and was...I assume was a part-owner of the company.
