who is at the bar seeking justice. Although the rich are favored in this society, that alone is no reason to deny them justice. If a principle that is truly just is established in a proceeding that happens to involve a very poor person, when the rich person stands in the shoes of that poor person, as far as the issue, the rich person is entitled to the same justice. So if ConAgra comes trundling in here, if IBP, if...I don't know if Hormel is still in Nebraska or not, but if my friend, Janssen, who may not have been paying taxes ever, but has paid some, but thinks he can find a way to get some back, then he should come on down. This is "Monty Hall". The deal has been made. Now everybody must be given the same consideration. But having been in the Legislature, I know that will not be the case. The Legislature does indeed regard persons and that's why the big shots and the wealthy will get huge tax breaks, but when it comes to little people who may be trying to make enough bread and procure enough pure water to drink with the bread and give to the little ones, the Legislature takes on a face of flint and pretending to engage in what they call welfare reform will come down with an iron fist against those people, that large number of poor, helpless, voiceless people, primarily women and children. They are the throwaways of this society. They are the expendables. Now maybe if the Legislature had done this earlier, that poor woman who was the scapegoat may not have gotten slapped upside the head. I hope she didn't. But see, when the right man commits domestic violence, that is overlooked. I saw in the paper this morning on page 2 of the Lincoln Journal Star where a trooper, who had been involved in three cases of assault against his wife, had the charges reduced to a misdemeanor because the county attorney said, well, I'm going for what I think I can win in court. Now, if the trooper had arrested somebody for having assaulted that arrestee's wife three times, you think the prosecutor would reduce that felony to a misdemeanor? No. People are regarded based on who they are, the uniform they wear, and the status they hold in this society.
