because the first type of equalization is that intercounty: county A versus county B. And as Senator Wickersham has talked about, what's so important about that is that when county B, the one who has not been equalized and who lags below...they have a tremendous advantage, and their advantage is that they have less value, so when you go to do state aid calculations, they show less resources. Less resources; more state aid. There also is the inequity that, I live in the same school district, but I'm in one county who has revalued. All of a sudden, for that support of the school district, I'm paying a much higher percentage, because my county did do revaluation. That's equalization "one". That's county to county. The other is...and I think that it's easy to blur sometimes...is intracounty, within the county, the equalization between similarly situated properties. And that's the reason, when the TERC was created and this...and the state adopted the TERC board through the constitutional amendment, that you had to not only look at how one homeowner was pitted against another homeowner to pay their fair share, but how one county and one taxing district was looked at to another one. And as we go about doing this...and I think this evening...and Senator Quandahl, I don't know where this amendment's going to go, if it goes to a vote, or other discussions...but the process itself is not done. Because if you do have across-the-board valuation changes, you will have some people who are over 100 percent. That does happen. But there's a remedy for those people that happen. We have made a quicker, simpler, and a cheaper appeals process for their individual pieces of property, and they have a remedy. Now, it used to be they had to go hire a lawyer and go to the district court. The Legislature changed that. The Legislature allowed them to represent themselves in an appeal process, for a small amount of money, to go and take care of that. The problem is, that puts pressure on your county assessor. And people need to begin to look at...job of the assessor is not a very easy job. For the life of me, I don't know how we keep assessors in this state.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: But we've been able to do that. And so when we talk about that the process is flawed, you need to take the whole process into consideration. And this afternoon, and
