using drugs. And the point that he made to me was he thought there was no accountability from the schools as to how they were using the money. But we don't, with the other fines we don't say, because you get money from speeding tickets, that would have to go to driver's ed. However, I'm thinking about that. (Laugh) But we have, as Senator Chambers pointed out, been very clear in directing what should happen with money from fines. And so, although the things that law enforcement may be doing are all well and good in finding drug and the use of drugs by young people, it...the way that I believe certainly the constitution reads, and as Senator Chambers has pointed out, the full intent originally was that the money goes to the schools. And I guess one thing we could say to law enforcement, at least we aren't making this retroactive. Thank you.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Thank you, Senator Bohlke. Senator Brashear.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: Mr. President, thank you. Colleagues, I'm only going to speak briefly and then yield my time, that's a forecast to Senator Chambers. But I would like to...I would like to point out, in a sense of fairness, Nebraska is not the only place where this is happening. But lest we think what we do here is not important, I would like to have everybody focus on the fact that all jurisdictions collectively are running $645 million through this process in a fiscal year. The figure for 1995, Fiscal Year 1995, was $645 million. And you should know that there's so much money run through this federal process, rather than it being handled at the state level, that we have created the Asset Forfeiture Section of the Office of the Chief Counsel which oversees the Asset Forfeiture Program of the Drug Enforcement Agency. So it's interesting that we now are processing $645 million with a bureaucracy that serves a bureaucracy. This is not an insign...it's not an insignificant amount of money in Nebraska, it's not an insignificant process, it's not an insignificant amount of money nationally, and it isn't something that anybody has been all that forthcoming about. And if this discussion isn't about anything else, it's about accountability. And with that, Mr. President, I would yield the remainder of my time to Senator Chambers.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Senator Chambers, two minutes...three
