available, there might be opportunities to make choices and selections, and for them housing will not be so dear in terms of its scarcity. But if within that market or off to the side of that market there is a restriction on what is available, then other people may find their particular housing market to be very dear. So when I come to get anything, people know that I have fewer choices, that I am almost in a position to be confronted with a take it or leave it situation, knowing that I'm not often in a position where I can leave it. If I want to provide decent housing for my family, my opportunities are not as broad and open as you-all's opportunities are, so I wouldn't expect you to be sympathetic. I wouldn't expect you to be empathetic. I don't expect you to be any of those things. I'm just trying to explain to you that in this society opportunities are not available to everybody; that a dollar in my hand does not purchase for me in this society what a dollar in your hand will purchase for you. Not only if we're going after the same items will you get a better deal than I am, but there are some items that are not even available for me to purchase. So money in all cases does not always speak with the same volume for everybody who possesses the money. The realtors are not going to make that kind of housing available. They know they're not going to. They will never support a truly open housing bill because it cuts into their profits. They benefit from racism and segregation. Members of the Legislature, I have a little button, a little piece of paper that's stuck on my shirt, that says I voted, and I wrote no, no on it. I voted no against that quarter of a billion dollar bond issue in Omaha. Do you know what's driving that bond issue? Not concern about better buildings for all children,...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...but an urge to resegregate the Omaha Public Schools. They could never make an appeal to improve education and, on that basis alone, get a quarter of a billion dollar bond issue supported. But when they tell these white people we're going to get those black children out of your
