some situations of discrimination that do take place.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So if that's the case, and it really is and it's been documented, could it follow without requiring too great a stretch that I will get less for my money in the restricted areas where I can rent than other people spending the same amount in a less restricted area?

SENATOR SMITH: You're probably right, Senator. I'm not real familiar with that area, but I would guess that you probably have an argument there.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, now I'm going to bring it right down where we can all understand it. If you're in a position where you have to cross the burning sands, young Senator Smith, and you don't know a lot because you're young, but you know how hot those burning sands are because you drop an egg and when the shell cracked that egg fried on the burning sands. And you have no shoes upon your feet. There will be nothing separating the tender soles of your young feet from the burning sands. However, I sell sandals and these sandals not only have asbestos soles but they have a little device inside which will keep your feet cool. Now, if I know that you have to cross the burning sands and I'm the only one from whom you can purchase those shoes, do you think I'm going to sell you those shoes cheaply or dearly?

SENATOR SMITH: Well, since asbestos causes cancer, I'm not sure I'd be interested.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But as young as you are and you know that you...all right, so then you would walk across the burning sands and die from burns instead of the possibility of cancer. Is that true?

SENATOR SMITH: (Laugh) That's probably true.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. Now for wise people such as you, we don't have asbestos only. We have a different substance for the soles, so those are the sandals that I would sell you. If I know I've got something you've got to have and I'm the only one from whom you can get those things, I'm going to probably charge
