was killed was a junior at Nebraska Wesleyan, a Holdrege graduate. And she had just been accepted into medical school the week before the accident. This is no laughing matter. These are our kids' lives at stake. We don't seem to want to enact seat belt laws, mandatory. That would have saved her. We don't seem to want to lower speed limits. That might help a little bit. I think Senator Schellpeper was on the right track. If you want to control teenage drinking, do something that hits them where it hurts. Take away their driver's licenses. Maybe there's some middle ground here. Maybe we could craft some kind of amendment that would take it away for 60 days instead of 6 months to start with. I don't know the answer. But Senator Hilgert, I think you're on the right track. I'm going to be supportive, even though you maybe don't have the necessary 25 votes. But I don't think this Legislature is taking serious enough the problem of teenage drinking, and as it relates to driving. And if you've talked to a family that's had trouble, that's had a casualty because of...because of an accident, then it gets real close to home; it gets real, and it really hurts. So there's a lot of people in this state who've lost kids to accidents that they'll never get over. And if we could do something like this that would just save a few of them, I think it'd be worthwhile. So, Senator Hilgert, I commend you for bringing this amendment. Senator Landis, I heard what you said. If this causes the whole thing to come down, why, I guess so be it. But I don't think this Legislature is serious about alcohol consumption as it pertains to teenagers and as it pertains to their driving habits. And until we get serious about that...maybe, Senator Janssen or Senator Hilgert, you can answer me this question, how many states have enacted laws that revoke driver's licenses? It's up in the twenties, I believe. Is it not?

SENATOR HILGERT: (Microphone not activated immediately.)
...three.

SENATOR SCHROCK: Thirty-three states have enacted laws that revoke driver's licenses for minors in possession. How hard do we have to get hit over the head to realize that that's an effective tool to curb teenage drinking? Like I said, I wasn't going to speak on this, but it hits close to home. And I think we should take this amendment serious, or something similar to
