would be at the hearings, as opposed to so-called outsiders, and I'm sure there would be some at whatever hearing you have. But at least on a local level, they're going to know somewhat who those people are. So there again, that's just the local accountability. And I'm not familiar with the zoning committee hearings, but it appears from what we've heard that there are hearings required each time there's a zoning committee decision made and so on; they take public testimony. And I'm not sure it's all bad that people have to put down in writing what their comments are back to DEQ. I think that makes people sit down and think a little bit. And we've all been through the old thing when you say: when you're mad, don't just call them; write a letter to, look at it, tear it up, rewrite it again. You get some...a little bit more of the issues in the letter then, and maybe not quite so much emotion. So I'm not opposed to that. And I believe that what we're doing here allows for local control and local hearings. The counties that are not zoned now have the interim zoning bill to work, fall back on, that we passed this morning with the emergency clause, so I don't have much sympathy for a county anymore that's not zoned. They have no excuses. We've done everything possible we can other than mandate that they zone. So those local officials, being county commissioners, that responsibility is fully on their back, and they should accept that. So if they're not in the process of being zoned or zoned, why, that...they need to be...the citizens need to talk to their folks. I had a note handed to me that...I believe it was the Livestock Waste Task Force...that did not recommend public hearings. It was the Environmental Control Council. And I think that is right. I think it was...it wasn't the task force that said they needed those hearings. The question of the size of Class III feedlots, I know out in my area they're either big ones or they're not at all, and a 5,000-head lot isn't very big anymore, in all honesty. We have an 80,000-head lot going in. Actually, I think it's on the edge of Senator Pederson's district. They're in Lincoln County, so that would be his. And I have not had one phone call dealing with that...it's east of Wallace out there, owned by Texas interests...not had a single phone call on an 80,000-head capacity cattle feedlot. So I think it's all in the perception, whether we're dealing with hogs here or cattle. This...out in my country, it's cattle country, and people accept that odor and the inconvenience that cattle...a concentration of cattle
