truth here. It's not going to offend me, it's not going to disturb me, but I would sure like to have it on the floor, and it's not here now. Thank you.

SPEAKER KRISTENSEN: Senator Janssen.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislature. If I heard correctly yesterday, there were only about six counties left that had not started any interim zoning whatsoever. Of those...that's 6 out of 93 counties, that's not very many. And I would imagine, within the next few years, they will have zoning regulations set in place. Now if you've got a county that...I heard the idea that if you want the zoning regulations should be put in a library. All right, that means say in my particular county I think we have a half a dozen libraries. That means that a copy of the zoning regulation has to be sent to every one of those libraries and updated, as your zoning committees change any regulations whatsoever they have to be updated. Are they going to be correctly updated? Are the librarians in these small towns going to take those zoning regulations and make sure that every amendment that's put on them is posted, or are you going to be in there and think you've got the real copy and it's not, it's not been updated. Libraries do a great job, I'm not condemning libraries. But if it is in a central location, such as the Secretary of State's Office, what in the world, every time that there's a change it's reported and is automatically put on those regulations in one place. The same way election laws are there. If you want to find out an election law, call the Secretary of State's Office. You want to know about petitions, call the Secretary of State's Office. And with the technology we have in this day and age, I...in a matter of minutes these changes can be made, and you only have to go to one place to make those changes. If a county wants it...one of the reasons for this, in my opinion anyway, is that other neighboring counties, neighboring counties will be able to find out what their neighbors, if they make any changes on their zoning regulations, or if they're starting new zoning in a particular county, they can check with their neighboring counties and go to one place and find out what is happening in those neighboring counties. I see absolutely nothing wrong with this. I cannot see that it's going to cost that much money. I am a liberal and a conservative. I'm kind of a middle of the
