cannot avoid commenting on the entry into the congressional race of the Right Reverend Dr. Osborne. That is really something that he has chosen to do that, and I'm going to talk about that a little more as we go on, not to attack him but just as a comment on the status of politics in America and specifically Nebraska. But I was asked why I thought he ran for the House instead of the Senate, and I said, well, he'd rather play UNO than Florida State. The House is where the riffraff are located, the ne'er-do-wells, those who spend all of their life campaigning. In the House, they used to sit with their feet upon the desks. They'd whittle, and some of the desks still have things carved in them. They'd chew and spit tobacco on the floor. Now, in the Senate, where you had the House of Lords, the closest America could come, they had a snuffbox in the back and, as they walked into the Senate Chamber, they could take some snuff and stick it down...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...in their lip or snuff it up their nose and whatever else they did with it, and they had spittoons around so that slimy, thick juice could be skeeted into the platoon (sic), but their aim was not always good, so they had speckle spots and slippery stains on the carpet (laugh) in the Senate. Now some of that has been changed, but the House still is where the ragtag and bobtail, more or less, are located. The Senate is somewhat more deliberative, although not necessarily wiser. They take more time. They are the saucer, as Alexander Hamilton said, into which the hot legislation from the House is poured to cool, so that a second look can be taken. And much that comes out of the House can be rejected, but the House controls the purse strings and that's why what they seek cannot be totally disregarded. I...

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...do want a vote on this and I'm going to ask for a call of the house and, by the way, you can vote no on a call of the house too, for my new colleagues.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: The question is, shall the house go under call? Those in favor vote aye, those opposed nay. Question is,
