

TRANSCRIPT PREPARED BY THE CLERK OF THE LEGISLATURE
Transcriber's Office

January 31, 2000 LB 175

English, United Kingdom English, or American English, good old, red, white and blue, American English?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Chambers, you're recognized to speak.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Mr. President, members of the Legislature, now that "Baron" Tyson is back, I can share with him some additional research that was done. Now all this talk of Oxford, Oxford, I'd like to ask Senator Tyson one question so that I won't misstate anything. Senator Tyson,...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Would you yield, Senator Tyson?

SENATOR TYSON: Sir.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Tyson, where was the first Oxford Dictionary of the English Language, the progenitor of that set back there, done? Where did it originate, if you know?

SENATOR TYSON: Actually, it was, I believe, a committee formed in the nineteenth century, they appointed Professor McMurray (phonetic), who spent the rest of his life gathering and logging little slips of paper, but I believe it was Oxford.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oxford what?

SENATOR TYSON: England.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Ox...that's...so it's England...it's English English, England?

SENATOR TYSON: No, they differentiate various usages within the definition of a word.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I'm going to let you go after I ask this question. But have you ever noticed the pec...how peculiar it is that the English speak English worse than anybody else? They don't know how to speak English, but I won't engage in that discussion. Thank you, Senator Tyson. You all have heard of Webster's Dictionary. The courts of this country rely on Webster. The universities encourage students to buy a Webster's