what McCain's main point is. I know that this black guy, Keyes, jumped into a mosh pit and now everybody is talking about that. He is the one being discussed, that has taken center stage in the campaign for presidency because some guy jumped off a stage into a group of screaming people, and that's what the presidency is about. Well some people are calling George Bush a liar because they said things he claims he did or didn't do in Texas, really the contrary to what he said is what in fact occurred. Do you know that there are people even talking about his ears, that his ears don't look right because they make him look like a demon. And some of his campaign people have actually argued that there are pamphlets put out by the other side, and I don't know which one of the dwarfs put it out. But they said his ears have been enlarged to look even more menacing. I guess like Doctor Spock on "Star Trek". They talk about his smirk. So when you put a smirk with his ears, then I guess he looks, to some people, like a demon, and that's what the presidential campaign is about now. And these are things beyond my ability to understand or get excited about. I don't know how Keyes got involved in what most black people call white folks mess, and that's what the campaign for presidency is about is a lot of hubbub about nothing, no substantive issues. And now they're going to be shocked when one of them gets more votes from those people in New Hampshire than the other one. And it's not going to mean anything, because other people have done that and gotten trounced in the rest of the country.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Mr. President. I accept that. But I'll tell you one thing about the system, it's the one that the people say they want, and people get, when it comes to politics, what they deserve, at least that's what some cynics will say. But people do not always get what they deserve, even when they do what appears to be foolish things. They sometimes do foolish things because they don't know any better. They did not get a good education. They are not literate, they cannot read. So, if they watch television and watch news, they're not going to get the truth, in the abstract sense, they're going to get the particular slant of the person they hear speaking on that program. So people are going all different directions, all
