policy secretary that said we were going to be fined again for not having this done. And we're terribly upset about this. One of the other matters that I would just like to reference is Senator Brashear's inquiry about the University of Nebraska and their health care program. Now the University of Nebraska is like any business in that they budget certain monies for certain functions. And in this case they and the other administrative agencies within the state miss because of the acceleration of health care. We felt that we treated the university in the same fashion that we treated the other state agencies, and probably treated them more tougher, I'd say, we treated them tougher than we did the others in that we said you figure out the balance. So anyway, that's not really what I wanted to talk about. I wanted to talk about the Wilderness Camp. Senator Chambers had mentioned the Wilderness Camp, and I would like to give a little bit of understanding as to how this came about. I'd begin by saying that when we got down here to start our appropriations this year, there was a proposal that a Wilderness Camp be put in, and this was a Governor's proposal. And we were very, very skeptical of a Wilderness Camp. We didn't exactly understand what a Wilderness Camp would be. But we knew that we had problems in the area of youth incarceration, but we didn't know exactly how this Wilderness Camp was going to work. And the proposal was that we divert money from Geneva and spend that in the Wilderness Camp. Well, now this bothered us a great deal. Then we turned it down initially. So what we decided to do was really look into this Wilderness Camp and find out what the situation was and why the Wilderness Camp. And what actually happened was that we started to study this program and found it was referred to in the Lincoln Journal Star that there are approximately 232 people incarcerated at the Kearney boys school, and 1990 there were 162, and that now the days have dropped where they're actually there, from 160 down to 124. So what's happening is at Kearney, that as the numbers increase, the amount of time that they can spend there, because of the limited facilities, has gone down. And if you talk to the administrators there they say that the biggest thing that's wrong with their program at Kearney, which is a really good program, but the biggest thing that's wrong is that they do not have enough time to actually work with these young boys and actually try to get them straightened out. So I think we had to look for something that would actually accomplish this purpose.
