do, but they will help...the amendment will help the material flow. But it gives me a chance to speak again on what Senator Beutler is aiming for. I often hear and read about, from all around the country, those who are involved with the public schools, especially teachers and administrators, that they're opposed to a voucher system because it would undermine the public school system, and I agree with that. We're told by these public school people who feed at the public trough and want to continue doing so that the public schools provide quality education. Well, quality should be able to withstand a test, and I had talked about writing before. I like the inclusion of science. Most people, if you ask them to define science, might not have a definition readily at hand. Maybe they have several things they would say about it. They could talk about science in terms of the methodology employed by one who is pursuing a scientific endeavor. Science could be viewed as the subject matter itself or the entire body of findings and discoveries made by those people called scientists. But one thing is sure--objectivity is what you strive for. Objectivity refers simply to seeing a thing for what it is; then, if you're skilled in communication, calling it what it is. Now, if I were a dictator I could compel...better than that, I am the head of the church, any church, and I control education so that I can control the minds of my parishioners. And I also have an army. My church and my state are combined into one and, because I have the army and can enforce my will, and I am head of the church and determine all matters of moral...morals, I also determine all matters of education for the populace. So I begin to require everybody in my realm to say that hot is cold and cold is hot, and given enough time that's what everybody says. But that kind of activity is what you call Sunday morning truth. Everybody gives verbal assent to it, but nobody lives in accord with it, because if my heretical sister Redfield wants to boil water, she does not put it in the icebox of the refrigerator despite the fact that I said cold is hot, and if somebody wants to produce a skating rink they do not use boiling water. So, despite the fact that we have given certain definitions to words and changed their definition, when we deal in the real world my sister who wants to make hot tea will put the kettle on the fire. And then if I find it out, I'd gather all of my deacons, all of my bishops, all of my cardinals and other twitterers around the table and we enter our cups and we're just laughing
