to cram for a test and pass the test because they know what's on the test.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Wickersham. Senator Chambers, there are no further lights on. Did you wish to close on your amendment?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes, Mr. President. I think about the real world and I look at the two men who are running for President. Mr. Bush, who was born with silver spoon in his mouth, given every advantage, whether he took advantage of them or not I don't know, he has a brother across the way from where he serves as Governor who is Governor of Florida, and he doesn't speak with a southern accent. His daddy doesn't speak with a southern accent, but George Wallace Bush does. George Wallace is what I choose to call him, not George W. Give him his whole name. Well, he felt he was treated unfairly when he was asked to name three of the heads of five countries that were in the news and he didn't know. Canadians decided to have fun with him a couple of weeks ago and took the name of a fast food franchise in Canada, said that was the name of the head man in Canada and said he had endorsed George Bush. He's out there showing his ignorance. And you know how he was defended by a spokesperson when he didn't know anything in current events, that you would give a child a score down in civics for not knowing? Well, said this nice lady who's paid a high salary and has to cover for this dumbbell, he's not trying to get on "Jeopardy". In other words, he knows enough to be President of the United States, but he doesn't know enough to be on "Jeopardy", and it's only rational that somebody wanting to be on "Jeopardy" would know more than somebody who wants to be President of the United States. That's the kind of silliness that grown people engage in and he wants to call himself the education President. And he cannot say to parents, I want your
