marketing. Frankly, I don't think a study is needed. I think some people just need to open their eyes and get out of that state of denial, stop begging and looking to be subsidized and get out here and market their product like anybody else has to do, and if they can't sell to the public, then their product does not sell. But to require the state to continue propping them up, that's one thing, but now we're at the point of dictating to the consumer and dictating to the seller, and by that I meant the retailer, and I think that's wrong. If people are so angry because they think these wholesalers are big oil, whoever that is, will have something to do with prices and that's bad, how much worse is it for the state to do something far more serious, far more widespread than that? So that's why I'm against the thrust of the bill. But since nobody else is talking, this bill will get a vote and they'll move it. So I've got to find a way to stop it from going anywhere at this point. Now if somebody, and Senator Connealy is here if he wants to answer at my mike, if somebody can tell me...oh, he's going to his mike, if somebody can tell me where these negotiations are going on, and what there is that's on the table, instead of coming up with six or seven possibilities and alternatives, what have we reached? I would like to ask Senator Connealy that question if he knows the answers.

SENATOR CROSBY: Senator Connealy, will you yield for a question?

SENATOR CONNEALY: I'll yield, yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Connealy, do you know what the status of these negotiations, whatever they are, would be at this point?

SENATOR CONNEALY: No.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do...okay.

SENATOR CONNEALY: We have to decide that.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: You and I?

SENATOR CONNEALY: Be part of it.
