get involved in issues of gambling because so much money can be made on top of the table, around the table, under the table. Those who produce and sell and maintain the machines make money. The ones who run the games make money. They might grease a few palms. Why, I read the other day about this great big truck stop that's got some kind of slot machine activity where you win telephone cards, supposedly, where you can call and talk for two minutes. One poor little ragtag bobtail individual said that they are always raiding him but your Attorney General, whom you all think is so nonpartisan, that's right, Senator Crosby, all of the people who think he's nonpartisan has been contacted about that big operation and he hasn't got time to touch it. But they'll go after this little guy, and they had a long paper in...article in the paper. He's just crying his little eyes out and I think he's justified. But the big ones are not touched by the law enforcement people in this state. Gambling tends to corrupt. Any place, any activity where a large amount of money is just sloshing and slushing around is going to corrupt people. When I was in the barracks, the sergeant would always tell you, put a lock on your duffel bag and the lock will keep out honest people. It's hard when people are participating in an activity which has questionable moral worth in the beginning, but if you look at gambling as just an activity and forget the different compartments they break it into to make it respectable, see, in church gambling has the clergy collar and the nun's habit. Bingo is all right. The bishop and everybody can gamble there. But a bishop got upset because some priests were gambling at the casino in Iowa. Gambling is gambling is gambling. Whether you use paper cards, plastic cards, machines, parimutuel betting slips, bookmaking, dice, it's all the same. And those who participate, other than the house, are the suckers. But the suckers are always going to be there and, as they say, a sucker is for nothing but licking. And like that watch, they take a licking and they keep on ticking right on into poverty. So what Senator Smith is saying is that since society, he didn't say it this way, maybe this is not what he is saying, but society has put its stamp of approval on certain forms of gambling. Clergy collar gambling is all right. White collar gambling on the stock market is all right. Blue collar gambling at the horse track is all right. Frilly collared gambling with the secretaries' pools is all right.
