about how you ought to think something of yourself and, even if you don't, pretend that you do. I know some of my colleagues feel that the bed of these people...well, the Governor, he's the one who did it, was made by him, let him rest in it. Well, all the other offices are dragged down too. And there was a point that I wanted to be sure and make. No. My seatmate asked me did I need my glasses. I was trying to sift through the various things I wrote on this paper to see which one was nice enough for me to say, but nevertheless would be like a wasp--it is well-proportioned, narrow at the middle, it has these neat bands around it, and ends in a sting. I think it's presumptuous for a Governor to say he's going to get reelected. We're not even raising this Governor's salary. It cannot be raised during his term of office, and I don't think he's going to be reelected. And I think he, like Governor Nelson, wants to make it hard on the person who comes after him. Now how much smaller of mind can you be? We don't want to fit into that category. Why, think of the fine Lieutenant Governor we have sitting up there who used to be one of our colleagues. I think the salary increases are too low, as I said the other day, but we need to start somewhere and this is a start. Why, where could you get a finer Attorney General for the amount of money that we pay? I would suggest on any corner where winos gather. (Laughter) That's all that I have to say, Mr. President. I don't want to get carried away.

PRESIDENT MAURSTAD: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Crosby.

SENATOR CROSBY: Thank you, Mr. President and members. I voted against this bill when it came through and I'll...I'm going to vote against the override. But I have...I thought about that when I saw that...and I understood that the bill would be vetoed and so I tried to examine my thoughts about why do I feel the way I do about this particular thing. It doesn't have anything to do necessarily with the people who are in the offices, although I think sometimes we don't...and I guess under the United States Constitution you can't put any qualifications into the...to the requirements for these offices, but I do think some of them should have some requirements, and I won't go into that today. But what I...what I came up with in my own analysis of why I feel the way I do is that I think no one...people don't
