FLOOR DEBATE

January 24, 2003 LB 78

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. Thank you. If you...members of the Legislature, if you look on page 3 of this bill, this is one of the circumstances under which a citation will not be issued by an inspector: "in which the circumstances do not pose a danger to the official or inspector" there can be an issuance; if it poses a danger, there cannot be an issuance. This seems to be recognizing that the kinds of situations of a volatile nature that Senator Vrtiska and Senator Wehrbein kind of hinted at, those situations were known by those who drafted this bill. And we should keep in mind that we're talking about very small cities. I'd like to ask Senator Hartnett another question now.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Would you yield, Senator?

SENATOR HARTNETT: Yes, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Hartnett, other than these people coming in here and saying that cities of the first class, primary class, and metropolitan class can have their inspectors issue these citations, what compelling argument did they give to justify these smaller outfits having that authority too?

SENATOR HARTNETT: I think efficiency, Senator Chambers, I think efficiency, that the building inspector does not have right now, in metropolitan city and a first-class city...you live in a metropolitan city; I live in a primary class city...a first-class city. The building inspector has the power to issue citation.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I know. But here's what I'm asking you.

SENATOR HARTNETT: Okay.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: What is going on in these small towns that necessitates these inspectors having that authority? If the town is small, how much other work is this inspector going to be doing? How many buildings are there to be inspected, and how often must they be inspected?

SENATOR HARTNETT: Unless...Senator Chambers, unless they have a
