FLOOR DEBATE

January 28, 2003 LB 306

SENATOR JANSSEN: And if you...thank you.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Janssen. Senator Tyson.

SENATOR TYSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, members of the body. I've only got a very, very short thing to say. And that is that I think that a budget cut should be a budget cut and not something made up by raising use fees. I think that it should reflect the agency's willingness to be in tune with the tenor of the times. And I like that play on words, and if you don't, too bad. I think that, at least for me, voting against LB 306 is a no-brainer. This is an attempt on the part of the Game and Parks Commission to escape a situation in which every other part of government finds itself. And I believe they should not be permitted to do that. That's all I have to say. I wish to give the rest of my time to...what's his name. Oh, Senator Chambers.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Tyson. Senator Chambers, you have four minutes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Senator Tyson. Senator Janssen made some comments with which I would agree. I had stated yesterday that I see a difference between killing animals for pleasure, and culling herds where it's necessary for that to be done. Human beings are encroaching more and more on the habitat of animals. Then, when the animals react in the way that everybody knows they're going to react, the animals are considered rogues, and they are mercilessly slaughtered. The animals do not come where human beings are; human beings encroach on their territory. There are people who study the amount of space that is needed to support an individual animal of a particular species. They look at the food supply, the availability of mates, the likelihood that these critters of the same species will have overlapping territories and fight. And they've also learned that when you reduce the territory so that there is not enough space, needed by each critter to support his or her needs, then the relationships among those animals break down, and they behave in a very erratic, destructive fashion. When they fight, unless you're talking about deer or those that have horns that can interlock and they die because they can't get loose, animals
