stories that the Grimm brothers put out. His name was Polyphemus. So whether his name was Polyphemus, or he was the nameless giant in Senator Landis' version, "fe-fi-fo-fum" was what he said. And while we're on these fees, I think that is an appropriate rallying cry for people like Senator Schrock who want to throw pebbles into the basket. And it's a rallying cry for those such as myself who say nobody should put a pebble in the basket. Don't be like...and I'm going to mix metaphors and mix places from which I cite. There was someplace else in a writing where it said, they bind burdens grievous to be borne, and lay them on other men's shoulders, and they will not touch them with their little finger. Well, when it comes to raising the fee to let people enter the parks, people on this floor don't care about that. And it's a small amount. But I could get Senator Schrock to squeal like a pig with his nose under the gate if I said we're going to put a penny a bushel on corn, soybeans, and any other production out of the ground that you put in a bushel basket. We're going to add ten cents per pound to any livestock weighing over 60 pounds at the time it is taken to market. You wouldn't have them saying, well, a dime...what's a dime? What's a penny? They'd be screaming bloody murder, because their ox is being gored. The people who go to these parks have no voice on this floor, other than mine and a few of the rest of us. They are not organized into recognized, identifiable constituency. They're that amorphous group from whom money can be taken without consequence. But again, I feel a responsibility to make sure that activities are not priced out of the range of people by those who are so well off that six additional dollars means nothing to them. They might be the same ones who would say, put a tax on food. And their rationale would be, well, if two cents is going to stop you from buying a loaf of bread, you don't deserve any bread. But I take the contrary view. I know people so poor that two extra cents will stop them from buying a loaf of bread, because when you go to the merchant and you say, I'm two cents short, he will not say, well, just take the bread, the other two cents is on me. I have seen people in grocery stores, with children, and they'd have to take back essentials. I'm not talking about steaks. I'm not talking about cakes.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.
