FLOOR DEBATE

February 10, 2003 LB 282

SENATOR BEUTLER: I understand. I understand that.

SENATOR LANDIS: Okay.

SENATOR BEUTLER: Okay. But if...

SENATOR LANDIS: So in other words...but in other words, for example, if nexus occurs and they stumble into nexus, we can sue them for compliance. One of the things that this does is it takes away the risk of that on terms that people can live with. If Barnes & Noble were to establish nexus in this state, we can then collect taxes from them.

SENATOR BEUTLER: Well, getting beyond that question, I guess, the other day in discussion, for example, Wal-Mart and Penney's were cited as people who wanted to pay their taxes. But there's already a nexus to them in our state, for example.

SENATOR LANDIS: No, Wal-Mart and Penney's...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...have separate Internet operations. Wal-Mart has a separate operation. Now, they have...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time. I'm sorry, Senator Landis. Senator Beutler. Senator Landis, your light is next, and this will be your third time.

SENATOR LANDIS: There was a desire not to have the penalties written in the statute. Somebody asked me what penalties there might be and, in fact, one of the ones that the people who were working on the streamline project thought of was, well, maybe, maybe you could have a temporary cessation of the volunteers collecting taxes. I don't know...you know, like not to collect taxes for ten days for one state who was in, you know, violation or whatever. With respect to the member states, I was asked about that. The ones that care most about this project are states that have a sales tax and no income tax. The most significant driving forces are places like Texas, Florida, and
