February 25, 2003 LB 216

the other hand, the body feels that it's better to give me all of this time on numerous bills, the opportunity to lay out my point of view on this subject, I'm willing to accept what is given to me. In football, players are told, don't try to do more than your ability or the capability of the team will allow to be done; take what the other team gives you. Meaning, if you're on offense and you can run two or three yards, take that. Don't try to score a touchdown on every play, because you lack the talent and the ability. Just matriculate down the field, as a coach for the old Kansas City Chiefs used the word, and you may get into the end zone and score a touchdown. Well, I'm going to matriculate through this session with this rider. And I'm inviting others to get on board. Ride this rider with me, and let us do that which is just and proper. For my colleagues who might be familiar with the "Holly Bibble"...they call it the Holy Bible...there is a division of that book into two main parts, the Old Testament and the New Testament. In the New Testament, the first four books are Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. They are known as the gospels. And they repeat and duplicate, to a great extent, what each and the others project. But not one of those books was written sooner than 33 or 35, in some cases more years, after Jesus was gone, if he ever was really here as a person, breathing, walking, talking, in the way that I am. But nevertheless, one of his parables...and I explained the other day where the term "parables" came from...he talked about an unjust judge. This man was unjust, and he boasted about not fearing God or regarding any man. He would do what he wanted to do. He would be as arbitrary as he pleased, and nobody could call him to account. So one day he was walking out of the courthouse, resplendent in his robes and other courtly regalia. This poor widow, sitting by the door, waiting for him to come out, tugged on his robe and said, oh judge, avenge me of mine enemy. And the judge jerked his robe away, turned with a huff, and walked off. The next day the scene was repeated. The widow jerked the robe. When the judge looked, she said, judge, avenge me of mine adversary. The judge jerked away and walked away. This went on for several days. Finally the judge grew weary. And the next time he went out and the woman grabbed his robe, he said, though I regard not man and fear not God, woman, you're about to drive me to distraction. What do you want? She said that time what she said the first
