off the street. Whether it's a first offense or a fifth offense, that's the purpose?

SENATOR BAKER: That's correct.

SENATOR BOURNE: Okay. You had mentioned in your previous time on the microphone how many cases had been in front of the ALR. How many was that?

SENATOR BAKER: In 2002, there were 9,231 cases. That seems like a lot of cases, but that's the numbers I have in print from DMV.

SENATOR BOURNE: Okay, and my question is, is how many times of that 9,231 has the license not been revoked?

SENATOR BAKER: I can't tell you that. I can tell you that roughly half of those revocations were appealed. I think about 4,500 of them. They had forty-four hundred and some hearings in 2002, as I recall.

SENATOR BOURNE: Okay.

SENATOR BAKER: How many of them actually were...ended up being revoked, I'd have to get that number. Off the top of my head, it seemed like a very high percentage of them, though, remained revoked.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR BOURNE: Okay, a very high percentage of the 9,231 had their licenses revoked?

SENATOR BAKER: Well, they were revoked and only those that were appealed to a hearing could hop to have them reinstated. And, as I said, I...

SENATOR BOURNE: Okay. And the reason I'm asking this question, Senator Baker, I mean if they're...if all 9,231 still had their licenses revoked, that would indicate to me that it's not much of a hearing, and when we're talking about somebody's due
