recovery period, the net book depreciation factor and the net book value. And now we have a whole long list of things that come after, and then I would be done, and I'm going to try and use an economy of time here, that goes: the tax depreciation schedule, the list of qualified property, the purchase invoice, the contractor billings, the contractor statements, the lease agreements. I think maybe that's enough and I wanted it in the record and I wanted you to know where I was going, because we require all of that information. Now we don't keep it secret. We treat it confidentially, the same way we do your tax return and the tax return of your business and the tax return of the businesses that you represent from your district. And we have a whole long list of the information derived from all that confidential information that we will make public. And some of you have figured out I had to have this enlarged by a photocopy machine so that I could read it, and it comes to two pages of information that we will disclose. This isn't some nameless, faceless exercise. The company name, the project location, the amount of increased employment--these are the things we will tell the whole world--the amount of increased investment, the LB 775 agreements which have been signed during the previous calendar year, the LB 775 agreements that are still in effect, the identity of each taxpayer, the location of each project, the net book value of mainframe computers, peripheral components, turbine-powered aircraft, and the list goes...

SPEAKER BROMM: One minute.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: ...on and on. Those are the things which we will disclose, and the reason I have approached the subject matter this way is to say please let's stop talking about we don't require any disclosure. We do. Let's stop talking about we keep in secret, because we don't. We do handle it properly. We do handle it in exactly the same way that we handle all this kind of proprietary, personal information, which the law has regarded as confidential, forever and ever and ever would be too great an extension, but for a very, very long time.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Brashear. Senator Dwite Pedersen.
