and draft an amendment so that it doesn't require anything and everything except which is...this doesn't even prohibit that which is prohibited by federal law, although of course federal law would supersede and control. And don't...let's don't be indignant about trying to get one way what we couldn't get the other way. The body just spoke, whether we like it or not, and now we'll have an opportunity to speak again. And I urge the defeat of AMO915 and say again that there are legitimate policy analyses that we ought to be able to address in a skilled and craftsmanlike or "craftspeople" way. Thank you.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Brashear. Senator Maxwell.

SENATOR MAXWELL: Thank you, Mr. President. I rise in support of more discussion about this amendment. Senator Landis said that he just hasn't had time to process what's presented. Senator Brashear has said it's not well drafted enough. Perhaps they're right, I'm not sure, but I'm intrigued by this amendment because it addresses my dilemma. Senator Landis made a compelling argument yesterday for the quid pro quo. If we're going to give a benefit, we want to know in as much detail as possible what we're getting back for it. Yet, the business community says disclosure to the degree proposed would put us at a competitive disadvantage. So my dilemma is this. It doesn't make sense to me to provide businesses with an incentive on one hand and then, on the other hand, turn around and hit them with a requirement that hurts them in a competitive marketplace. And so I say I'm intrigued by this amendment because at least at first glance I thought, oh, perhaps we have something, we have a mechanism right now to kind of lean in, as the legislative branch, and look this situation over to the degree we'd like to. Maybe it's there and we just haven't figured out how to utilize it. So that's why I say I rise in support of more discussion of this amendment. With that in mind, Mr. President, I'll yield the balance of my time to Senator Beutler. Thank you.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Maxwell. Senator Beutler, you have three minutes and 30 seconds.

SENATOR BEUTLER: Senator Bromm, members of the Legislature, Senator Maxwell, thank you very much for the time. The
