FLOOR DEBATE

March 26, 2003      LB 117

SENATOR BROWN:    Yeah.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN:    So we have quite a while for working start. Are you ..would you...would it be your belief that some agencies might really never fit under this scenario?

SENATOR BROWN:    Well, the...under the...

SENATOR WEHRBEIN:    I mean, I'm thinking maybe Department of Revenue, where it's huge, and it's...it comes in pretty narrow time frame.

SENATOR BROWN:    That actually...I actually believe that that might be a great application. I know that there are some issues that would need to be addressed, but I think that might be a really good application. I think that the agencies that are the most...

SPEAKER BROMM:    One minute.

SENATOR BROWN:    ...attractive are either agencies that have checks of large sums that come in, or a number of small checks that, just the process, the time costs more maybe than the check does.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN:    So you're really saying, in terms of volume and dollars, is more likely in the larger volumes rather than the smaller volumes in the initial thrust.

SENATOR BROWN:    I think it might...I think that it's either...if you look at it from the interest, it's the larger checks...

SENATOR WEHRBEIN:    Right.

SENATOR BROWN:    ...that you want to get deposited the most quickly. And...but if you're looking at it from processing time, it's the smaller checks that take a lot of time to process. And if you're processing, as these machines do, several hundred a second, you know, you can really get some efficiency.
