us a list of some things that they could probably use if they would have this responsibility, and one of them I'd like to read. It says one is to commit to the compliance with the state Livestock Waste Management Act, so that would be one of the criteria that the livestock friendly county would have to do, is to follow all the livestock waste management rules. And it would show...it gives some flexibility in the design so that it wouldn't be so hard to meet all the requirements if they did follow all the rules of the county zoning. Another part of Section 2 of the amendment, it's a new concept. The department establish a resource database accessible by the county planning authority to assist them in evaluating the conditions of the applications. Many times the county zoning board or the county board does not have all this, so they could be able to access that through the University of Nebraska, Department of Agriculture, or somewhere like that. So that was the second part of it. Then it does change...adds to the new...some new sections to Section 23-114.01 and it talks about the final determination. It would ask...it would...the request of the person that is applying for the application would request a final determination somewhere along the line, and I'd like to have you hear real carefully, subject to the conditions defined by the zoning authority. So the final determination was kind of a problem but it is always subject to, so if the county board of county planning commission said that we will give you this permit if you follow, and you could have 10 steps, 15, whatever it might be that you would have to comply with before you'd be granted that final determination. So I have no problem with it and it also...it could be the final determination to say we deny the request also, not only grant it. They could say we deny the request because of whatever, and it would always be subject to the DEQ permits. And so the DEQ permits are the ones that cost a lot of money many times when you have to go into the engineering and the design and even construct the lagoons, and then only to come back and find out that you were denied your application. So that was tried to streamline that a little bit and make it a little bit easier to know where to go from whatever point you were at in the process. The last part in the committee amendments were something that I think was very important and it talks about a factual finding, that when a...the county zoning committee makes a request to the
