FLOOR DEBATE

April 15, 2003 LB 435

were very, very thriving communities at one time. And I know we have to go along, we have to go along with progress, but for an old man like me, you wonder once in awhile whether that is so good. We tend to give away the bank to corporations that really don't care about communities like the old-time drug store did, the hardware store, the grocery store, the cobbler, the clothier. I look at a rather large city in my district and I've watched their downtown area shrink away. There are more antique stores in the city of Fremont than I thought I would ever see. The reason they're there is because a thriving business was there at one time and it's not there anymore.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR JANSSEN: They can't compete with some people that are going to ruin this country for us. We don't get bailed out if we're in financial trouble. We can't go beg to government to help us out of the hole. And in small businesses, you cannot pass the price on to that customer. The customers right now are very aware of the prices that...for a can of Drano or a box of Cream of Wheat. They know what the prices are, and if you're out of range you cannot...they won't buy it from you. And loyalty in small communities is a thing of the past. So I don't know what the body is going to do with this. We start young people out at minimum wage. It's a training wage. Our young Pages up...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR JANSSEN: ...in front here, you know, they're learning. They go to school. This is going to be part of their...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time, Senator Janssen.

SENATOR JANSSEN: ...life's experiences.

SENATOR CUDABACK: I'm sorry.

SENATOR JANSSEN: And thank you for them. Thank you, Senator Cudaback.
