FLOOR DEBATE

April 15, 2003 LB 435

work in my store are most generally, I would say 99.9 percent of them, are second family employees. That means they are looking for something to do close to home, so we pay a fair wage. We pay above minimum wage. This company that I'm talking about also puts pressure, I mean big pressure, on suppliers--hold that price down. They have another corporate building next to theirs that they expect those suppliers to be there eight hours a day so that they can dictate to them what they're going to pay for those products. If you don't do that, they won't buy from you. I'm not mentioning any names, but one particular company said, no, we're not going to do that. Well, those products weren't handled in those stores. By missing out on the business, they knuckled under and did it. That's the same company that hires part-time help. They also threatened to move other manufacturers out of the state. That's what's happening. Senator Chambers, would you like the rest of my time? Thank you.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Chambers, about two minutes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you, Senator Janssen, and to tailgate right on to what Senator Janssen was talking about, America remains a market for whomever is producing whatever wherever. American companies leave this country and some will only move their headquarters offshore, so they can get tax breaks. While being so much in favor of other people's children going to war and dying, they don't even want to pay taxes. But people on floors of legislatures, like this, will roll over and fall all over themselves to help these big companies. And then as Senator Janssen pointed out, some of them will even move their manufacturing operations someplace so that they can take advantage of sweatshop conditions. And people on this floor would say, the way to compete is to get rid of the minimum wage, get rid of child labor laws, go back to the sweatshops because, as I was told about the athletes, nobody forces them to work in sweatshops. Nobody forces them to work for starvation wages. But we...

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...all know there are ways to coerce
