April 15, 2003      LB 435

I'm saying it, you know it's BS when you hear it in church, and you know it's BS when you say it too--just words with no meaning whatsoever. And here is what I call moral cowardice. When we have the means to address a problem, when we know a problem is there but we're afraid to address it, that's moral cowardice, fear, and that fear stops us from doing what we ought to do. Courage, in my mind, exists only when we overcome our fear or, in spite of our fear, do that thing we're afraid to do. That takes courage. Nothing I do takes courage for me because I'm not afraid of anything. I have less courage than anybody on this earth. Now, if I was running around here, shaking in my boots like my colleagues, running and fleeing when no man pursues...when I hear a leaf crackle, Senator Cunningham, I say a lion is in the street, a lion is in the street, and I'm in Lincoln, Nebraska, where they don't have lions. Now they have liars. Now if I was that kind of coward and I stood up for what I believe is right, scared, that takes courage. But nothing I do takes courage, nothing. I don't know whether my colleagues are moral cowards, insensitive, weak or what, but sometimes I am educated by my colleagues as to how they think. I'm starting on a new page now, because I want to refer to something Senator Combs said that was amazing to me. She said she was responding based on what her constituents told her, but she defined her constituents, or described them, a few businesses in her district. My constituency consists of more than a few anything.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I'm sure there are not 32,000 business people who put her in office. It would be good to go to those people who are struggling to make it and ask them how they feel, not these business people. I could have told Senator Combs what they'll say, and anybody else on this floor, and you'll think I'm a mind reader because I can tell you what these business people are going to say before they say it. Go to the ones who are impacted. I don't get sick where I need a doctor or medication. The last time I was coughing and sniffing around here that didn't even cost me the amount of a box of Comtrex. And when I buy Comtrex, that is an expensive medication for me. That is a huge medical outlay for me. I didn't even buy any Comtrex. So, since I don't take medication, I shouldn't care
